New Mahabaleshwar plan to be unveiled in 1 mnth

Yogesh Naik

MUMBAI: The state government is close to drawing up a regional plan for New Mahabaleshwar, a new hill station near Mahabaleshwar in Satara district. The plan, encompassing 235 villages and a portion of Sahyadri Tiger Reserve, will be made public in a month's time, said officials.

The Maharashtra State Road Development Corporation (MSRDC), which has been appointed as the regional planning authority for new Mahabaleshwar, said the main intention was to decongest Mahabaleshwar.

"We have been given the mandate and our town planning department is drawing up a comprehensive plan," MSRDC managing director Anil Gaikwad told Hindustan Times.

Initially, only 58 villages were included within the scope of the plan, said MSRDC's chief planner Jitendra Bhopale.

"But now, we have 235 villages under the plan and have already held four meetings with various stakeholders. We have also conducted surveys using drones, in addition to a LIDAR (light detection and ranging) survey," he said.

The notified area includes parts of Jawal, Patan and Satara

The plan to develop a new hill station near Mahabaleshwar was first mooted by Vikramsinh Patankar when he was the PWD minister in the state government (1999-2004), but there was little progress. The idea was revived recently as chief minister Eknath Shinde hails from Satara and wants improvement in his village, Dare.

"Nearly 60% of the notified area of new Mahabaleshwar comprises forests including the Sahyadri Tiger Reserve. But we will neither disturb the forests, nor touch the green belt. Instead, we will promote sustainable development and ecological tourism," said Bhopale. The Maharashtra Tourism Development Corporation has already launched boating and scuba diving facilities in the Munavale area, he added.

"We have a huge land bank and there is no need to touch forest land – especially when we need to have 33% land under forest cover, compared with Maharashtra's %," said D Stalin from the non-profit Vanshakti.

The forest department, which has not been consulted, is also likely to oppose the inclusion of forested areas in the plan.

How CXOs Can Archive Defining Moments Of Le

By R Suresh

Just as families preserve memories through photos and videos, senior leaders should archive key leadership moments as case studies. Instead of traditional career narratives, CXOs should highlight impactful career logs, especially from the last five years.

The familiar adage is that memories fade, but pictures don't. These documents, detailing critical decisions and outcomes, showcase leadership. Key parameters of constructing a career logging exercise include the following:

Reality Depiction: The career logging should not be a theoretical document, it should reflect on-ground reality with all constraints, trappings, tight situations and gauntlets. For instance, a leader in a QSR (quick service restaurant) chain, facing a crowded market with multiple coffee shops and restaurants has the task of expanding the chain. The reality of the entire market clutter has to be captured with all its facts and features.

Alternate Paths: As a CXO, what are alternate paths available at the critical decision-making moment? How are those pathways generated—document internal brainstorming, external consulting advice or just experience-based enlisting of alternatives? Further, the CXO career logger can document rewards and risks in each pathway. This will reflect the data analytics centrality of the CXO candidate.

Gut-Felt Decisions: In the current era, the CXO is no longer a maintenance executive. The status quo admin roles are stopping at N-3 or N-4 levels. Some of the key decisions the CXOs make are likely intuitive, gut-felt decisions. The CXO should write down what prompted her to choose a particular pathway. Recently, a top boss at one of the airlines decided not to order new aircraft. However, when he went to an airshow in Europe, he was carried away by the next-gen tech, and ended up ordering aircraft and then post-facto went on to rationalise the decision. This was a pure gut decision. Evaluators like such people.

Unfavourable Outcomes:

Sometimes, the outcomes of the pathway play out over months or years. The immediate outcome of, say 3-6 months, has to be chronicled. In more than half the cases, outcomes are not as favourable as the plan. Those unfavourable outcomes also need to be written down and corrective action taken needs to be logged in. There are several actions where changes in product launch, at of SKUs (stock keep may have backfire to be logged in.

Final Picture: Each day or a log event is al to the decision- pabilities of the C in the real world, t ne doesn't make t He does it with the board or high es. However, it is th and the ownership sion that rests with
